LAKESIDE

A ball game between Bingham and the 'Vinegar Hills' was held on the Ellsworth diamond last Sunday. The Vinegar Hills scoring 13 to 7. It was advertised in the Ellsworth items that the game was to be between Ellsworth and the Vinegar Hills, but Ellsworth must have been sure of defeat, for they refused to play until after the Vinegar Hills played Bingham, feeling sure that our boys would be so played out that they would be an easy victim. The game had to be postponed until next Sunday owing to the scarcity of time, not ambition. The Vinegar Hills beat the two games and lost one. But unlike the Ellsworth players they were good sports and smiling took defeat, even though both umpires gave them a rotten decision all the way through. But why shouldn't they? The Vinegar Hills are mostly all boys while the majority of their opponents claim to be experienced league players.

Native Farmers Are Now Tilling the Soil in State of Nebraska

Four-fifths of all the farms in Nebraska are being operated by white persons born in the United States, according to a compilation of federal census statistics just made and given out by the state agriculture department, says the Lincoln Star.
The government's returns show that of the 124,421 farms within the borders of this state, 99,429 are being managed and worked by native white farmers. There are 24,992 tracts of land in the hands of foreign-born whites, many of whom have become naturalized American citizens. The remaining 377 farms are in the possession of Indians and negroes.
Why North Dakota fell such an easy prey to the nonpartisan league is explained by the census statistics in the fact that it has a larger percentage of foreign-born among its rural population than any other state in the union. The percentage there is 46.7. Next after North Dakota come Minnesota with 37.7; Connecticut with 33.7; Washington with 29.8; California with 29.1; and Wisconsin with 28.5.
In the United States as a whole native white farmers have increased since 1910, 3.1 per cent. Colored farmers including Indians with negroes, have increased 3.2 per cent, while foreign born white farmers have decreased 13.2 per cent.
"The decreases in foreign born farmers," says the bureau of census, "was largely the result of the war on account of which large numbers returned to their native countries. The decrease in the number of German-born farmers alone was 81,148."
The total number of foreign born farmers in 1920 was less than in 1910 by 88,502.
The 950,007 colored farmers comprised 926,257 negroes, 16,213 Indians, 6,839 Japanese and 638 Chinese. Nearly 99 per cent of the negro farmers are in sixteen southern states.
The states showing the largest number of Indian farmers are Oklahoma with 5,301, New Mexico with 1,883, North Dakota with 1,440 and South Dakota with 1,275.
The states with the largest number of Japanese farmers are California with 6,152, Washington with 694, Colorado with 321, and Oregon with 224.
Burial charges have come down 10 per cent in some places, but they are no bargain at that. Wait a bit.—Seattle Argus.

"Robert," said the mother sternly to her offspring who had just broken a window with a baseball, "I'm going to give you a good whipping—not because you broke the window, but because you broke your promise to me that you would stop playing ball near the house."
"Aw, ma," whimpered the boy, "can't you do it for breaking the window? Dad'll have to lick somebody for that."

Speaking of chautauquas, what has become of the once famous "chautauqua salute"? Remember how they used to wave handkerchiefs? Then some scientific shark discovered that the waving of kerchiefs, especially soiled ones, spread disease, and then for a year or two they waved their hands instead.
Now the standard chautauqua salute is to stick out the tongue.
The doctors ought to approve of that. It's good training.
"Chairman of the committee on grounds" sounds like quite a distinction. Actually, they expect the brother to put up the tent. If we had that job, after the six-day feast of reason and flow of soul was over, we'd let it fall down.
While the men were swinging sledge hammers, they didn't ask Janitor Corp to swing one of them on the tent stakes. It seems they thought one of his years couldn't do that work to advantage. Finally, when everyone was out of breath, someone shoved a sledge into his hands, and he showed the entire gang up as rank amateurs.

True Miller drove a flivver up to the postoffice shortly after 1 p. m. Wednesday. Leaving the engine running, he dashed inside to mail a letter. Sheriff Miller saw him go, immediately stepped into the flivver and drove off down the street. About a block away he turned the car around, perched his feet on the windshield and laid low to await developments. True came dashing out, walked to the curb, turned around two or three times and then slowly crossed the street. He looked up and down the street, but didn't recognize the car with the sheriff. Then he proceeded to amble back to the garage. "Say," he called to Harry Coursey as soon as he was inside the door, "do you know whether I took a car to the postoffice just now?"

GENEROUS BEQUEST

There recently died in Illinois an aged farmer, reputed to be wealthy. After his death, however, it was discovered he left nothing. And his will ran like this:
"In the name of God, amen. There's only one thing I have, I leave the earth. My relatives have always wanted it. Now they can have it."
